Out For Justice (OFJ) Executive Director, Nichole Hanson-Mundell and her OFJ team are fierce advocates for returning citizens and others who experience the negative collateral consequences of having a criminal record. Whether advocating for criminal justice reform in Annapolis, providing an all-night resource clinic, supporting voting rights or helping someone who was just released from prison find resources, Nicole is a passionate, knowledgeable and effective advocate. Many have benefitted from her infectious energy and passion. Baltimore is lucky to have her and OFJ.

One of the most important things that OFJ does is teach people how to advocate for themselves and their community to change the laws and systems that have held them back for so long. Almost nothing is more empowering than the confidence that comes from using advocacy skills to testify at a legislative hearing, speak with elected officials, address a community meeting, or write a published editorial.

Nicole personally helped my non-profit, Return Home Baltimore (RHB), which provides a website resource for returning citizens coming home to Baltimore, by checking out a possible housing resource. I didn't ask her to do this, she just did it! She has also offered helpful suggestions for how RHB's resource website could be an even greater resource. RHB appreciates Nicole's insights, gained from a lived experience and her years as a grass roots advocate. Thank you, Nicole and OFJ for all you do.

With gratitude,
Dawna Cobb, Co-Founder
